Management vs leadership for finance and business professionals

As a manager with leadership responsibilities, your awareness of what leadership is as a discrete skill is key to developing a high performing team.

This workshop explores the difference between management and leadership. All leaders need to manage at some time, but to move from management to leadership requires deliberate steps. Understanding and recognising what differentiates management from leadership is key to growing your leadership and knowing which of those two roles you are, or should be, performing at any given time.

Understanding our individual preferences - MBTI®

As a leader, your awareness of your leadership strengths and style is key to developing authentic leadership.

This workshop uses Myers Briggs Type Indicator (MBTI) as a basis to explore individual MBTI preferences, helping us to identify and understand our preferred ways of working, and adapting to the preferences of those around us.

Recognising our own preferences, and the preferences of those around us is key to understanding how to lead authentically and consciously. You do not need to have attended a MBTI workshop previously.

Ideal for business professionals and teams who want to expand their MBTI understanding, increase awareness of individual preferences and improve awareness of others' preferences and how to use differences constructively.

Managing stress and In the Grip behaviours with MBTI®

As a leader, your awareness of your leadership strengths and style is a key step to developing authentic leadership.

This workshop uses Myers Briggs Type Indicator (MBTI) as a basis to explore In the Grip stress behaviours in ourselves and those around us. MBTI preferences help us to identify, understand and address the stressors which impact on the inferior function of our MBTI type. Recognising when we are In the Grip will enable us to focus on understanding our energisers which can act as counter-balances.

This workshop will help you to understand the functions of your type, enabling you to identify your preferences and blindspots and learn how to use them positively. You will start work on an individual resilience plan, taking into account the learnings from the workshop.
